

Greenkeeper

Average salary: $49,400

Career trend: strong growth

Job description

Few working environments can beat the view from the top of a fairway. With an office that spans hundreds of acres, greenkeepers plant and maintain the grass, fine turf and synthetic surfaces used in parks, gardens and sporting fields, ensuring it's safe and ready for use.

What greenkeepers do

Greenkeepers are responsible for the maintenance, care and appearance of sports grounds including football, cricket and rugby pitches, bowling greens, tennis courts, racecourses, and golf courses. They explore unique ways of manipulating vast landscapes through unpredictable weather patterns to create green oases.

Greenkeeping combines biological science, earth moving, surveying, and GPS technology to manage soil and grass and ensure turf is in top condition. Although they're part of a larger team, greenkeepers often work outdoors alone.

They cut and water greens, mow fairways, move holes and flags to reduce wear, rake bunkers, and maintain rough areas including planting trees, shrubs and flowerbeds. They also 'core' greens making holes in the soil to aerate it and achieve the right balance of solids, air and water.

Greenkeepers are increasingly required to measure the environmental impact of their work in terms of water conservation and the use of chemicals.
